

Fur prices rise – now is the time to buy

It is evident that the growing popularity of fur in fashion markets around the globe is pushing fur prices to record levels at international auctions. Reports back from the recent fur auctions show that fur prices have risen significantly.

This growth is being driven by innovative and wearable new fur styles being produced by international designers. Today fur appeals to people of all ages, there are many beautiful and exciting garments and accessories being created for young people as well as the more traditional garments.

A spokesman for London retailer John Kay Furs said "There is definitely a big trend swing towards the younger customer".

Now is the time to buy fur garments and accessories. The recent high prices at auction will impact on retail fur prices once the new season starts and customers will have to pay more for their fur.
